Railroad Board Attacks Living Wage

HEARST'S OPINION CITED

Dissenting Report Quoted
Art. of Publisher in Presenting Labor's Case

Chicago, Oct. 30.—The "living wage" on which railroad labor and labor in every field has based its post-war fight for pay increases was bitterly attacked as "a bit of mellifluous phraseology" in an opinion made public here by the United States Railroad Labor Board.

The opinion, voted by the railroad and public member groups of the board, is a direct challenge to the "dissenting opinion" filed by A. O. Wharton, labor member of the board, against the recent increase averaging two cents an hour granted to members of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees. Mr. Wharton charged the increase was not sufficient and did not give the workers "a living wage."

Mr. Wharton's opinion quoted as continued on Page 5, Column 3.

Board Rejects Hearst View as Not Evidence

Chicago, Oct. 30.—In their opinion, taking issue with the minority opinion of A. C. Wharton, labor member of the United States Railroad Labor Board, the majority members of the board say this regarding the editorial by William Randolph Hearst which Mr. Wharton quoted in full in his opinion:

"The lengthy newspaper article of William R. Hearst, incorporated in the dissenting opinion, is not evidence in this case. Mr. Hearst was not sworn nor cross-examined, nor is it shown that he is an expert on questions of the sort herein quoted. In so far as the article in question is adopted as the views of the signers of the dissenting opinion, it is pertinent and important, but a discussion of its many fallacies and misstatements need not now be entered upon in detail.

"It is worthy of note, however, that this article thus approvingly quoted contains the statement that the unjustifiable lowering of shopmen's wages caused the strike. Such a statement adopted and indorsed in an official document by a member of this board deserves, at least, brief comment.

"In the judgment of the Labor Board, and, we believe, of a great majority of the people, the shopmen's strike was an egregious blunder without any real justification, and this is said with the kindest feeling for the employees who have suffered most from its effects. It has wrought harm to all and good to none."

GRAIN FUTURES LAW HELD UP BY COURTS

Chicago, Oct. 30.—Federal Judge Carpenter today granted a stay or order preventing enforcement of the grain futures act pending a hearing on the application for a permanent injunction filed by the Chicago Board of Trade. Hearing on the permanent injunction will be held November 2.

DOG BITE IS FATAL TO GIRL

Three Other Children Under Treatment for Suspected Rabies in Medford

One Medford child is dead of hydrophobia and three others are under observation by doctors as the result of bites by a dog.

Seven-year-old Elizabeth Hamilton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hamilton of Lightfoot street, Medford, is the dead child.

She received a scratch on the lip from a collie dog, owned by Arthur Welden, a neighbor on the same street, on October 17.

The little girl received immediate treatment at her home, but as no alarming symptoms showed at first, her parents were not alarmed.

3 OTHERS ARE MYTEN.

Last Saturday, however, her condition had become such as to necessitate her removal to the hospital.

Shortly after the girl had been bitten, the dog broke its paw and a veterinarian was called. The dog was killed and its head sent away for examination. The examination showed that the dog had rabies.

In the meantime, three other children had been bitten by the same dog.

NEGRO COP ACCUSED BY GIRLS

Patrolman Trent Suspended on Charge of Opening Sisters' Bedroom Window

Patrolman Randolph L. Trent, colored, of the Dudley Street station in Roxbury, was today suspended by Superintendent of Police Crowley following a charge that he had attempted to break into the bedroom of the Misses Helen and Mae McAdams, twenty and twenty-one respectively, of No. 102½ George street, Roxbury.

The suspension order was made after Superintendent Crowley had received and read the report of the case by Captain Fitzgerald of the Dudley street station. Trent will be tried by a police board.

GIRLS AWAKENED.

Still suffering from fright, May and Helen McAdams, twenty and twenty-one, respectively, this afternoon related their experiences to the American.

"I was awakened by a scratching sound at the window," began May. "I heard Helen's elbow. We both listened and we were sure we heard some one. We got up to tell our mother."

LOUIS VITALE AND HIS "DUMMY WIFE"

CAROLS TO DOLL AS IMAGE OF LOST WIFE

Louis Vitale, shoemaker at No. 28 Grove street, West End, sings sweetly as he looks at the image of his lost wife.

His songs are addressed to a life-size dummy, a woman with painted cheeks, that sits in the corner of his little shop and waves her arms in animation when he so wills.

Seven years ago Louis awoke one morning to find that his wife, Carrie, had died and there was a great void in his heart.

For days and weeks he grieved. Then came an inspiration. He fashioned himself a big doll, about the size of his Carrie, and from various compositions moulded a face that bears some resemblance, in his belief at least, to her countenance.

As the days passed he talked with his "Carrie" and he sang to her the same songs he sang to her the day before.

NURSE MISSING WITH PATIENT

Newport, Oct. 29.—Romance which began in the scarlet fever ward of the Newport Hospital here is believed to have culminated in the elopement and marriage of Miss Charlotte Holt, a nurse in training at the hospital, and James Dutra, a clothing store clerk, who was a former patient under the care of Miss Holt.

The last heard of the couple was in Boston.

The couple have been keeping company many years against the wishes of Miss Holt's parents, ever since Dutra was confined in the scarlet fever ward.

One morning last week the head nurse telephoned Miss Holt's parents and asked if Miss Holt had been at home at night as her room at the nurses' home had not been occupied. Her parents were surprised to learn that she had not been there.

The next day came when a taxi driver arrived at the Dutra home the next day and asked to be paid for taking Miss Holt and Dutra to Boston the day before.

ATTORNEY CORCORAN ON TRIAL NOV. 1

Several Other Members of Alleged Blackmail Gang to Be Arraigned

The trial of William J. Corcoran and other members of Boston's alleged blackmail ring has been set for November 1.

Others indicted with Corcoran were:

Leo Corcoran, his brother Harry E. Levenson, J. Warren Kane, Michael J. Lyons, Theodore Barnes, Francis Duggan and his wife, Thomas Duggan, Peggy Purdy Partridge and Oscar Killebrew, alias Mac Roshach.

Attorney-General J. Weston Allen was in lengthy conference today with District Attorney Thomas C. O'Brien in the attorney-general's office.

Neither of the officials would state the subject of their conference, but it is thought that it concerned the impending trial of Corcoran and the others.

In one indictment the Corcoran brothers, Levenson, Kane and Killebrew are charged with conspiracy involving women.

Other indictments.

In another indictment the same defendants, together with Lyons and Barnes the Duggans and Peggy Partridge, are charged with having extorted money from Max Korn and Kenneth Merrill. It is charged that this money was taken following threats to expose these two men for alleged criminal relations with the women defendants.

Another indictment charges a conspiracy to threaten James J. Donavan and one Curtis along similar lines.

Another indictment charges William J. Corcoran and Harry E. Levenson.

CLEAR IN DEATH OF WIFE, PEASE
WEDS AGAIN
Mrs. Katherine Brown of Revere is now Mrs. Arthur H. Pease, the Boston American learned today. Less than six months after the mysterious death of his wife, Pease, exonerated of any participation in the death, married the woman who, during the investigation, charged him with being the father of the baby born to her in July.

LIQUOR GOT ON BAD WARRANT
NO EVIDENCE
Liquor seized on an illegal search warrant cannot be used as evidence against a defendant. A decision to that effect was handed down today by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. The decision is the first of its kind to be made by the court under the national prohibition act. It was written by Federal Judge George W. Anderson. Judges Bingham and Johnson concurred.

The case in question was that of Daniel P. Giles of New Hampshire against the United States, in the New Hampshire Federal Court. Giles had been indicted for violation of the prohibition act. He admitted possessing the liquor, as charged, but contended that it was for medical and not beverage purposes. Recently he asked that the indictment against him be quashed and the confidential alcohol returned to him. The district judge denied these motions and the case was appealed.

In ruling for Giles, the decision said, in part: "The search warrant was bad, the government's seizure unauthorized and the denial of the motion for return of the article seized in error. The admission of the property as evidence against Giles was also in error."

Pease and Mrs. Brown were married last Friday by the Rev. Charles Titton of the Wesley Church in South Boston. The Peases will live in the home of Mr. Pease at No. 145 Crescent avenue. The effects of Mrs. Brown are being moved there. Chester, eighteen, and Harold, twenty-one, sons of Mrs. Brown, will also make their home there.

Seen at her home today, Mrs. Pease said: "I know there will be a lot of criticism because of our marriage. I can't say anything about it, because Mr. Pease is not at home and he will be very angry if I talk. I can only say that one of the reasons was to give a name to my little baby girl. As far as the public is concerned, I don't care a darn what they think, and I don't think Mr. Pease does either."

The baby girl, Katherine, is in the Winter home of the Floating Hospital at Brookline. She will remain there, Mrs. Pease said, until things are straightened out.

When he used to twenty-five years ago when he wooed and won her from another young Italian. Every night when he finished his work he would "talk over" with her the affairs of the house, of his business and such problems as were troubling him. Other evenings he would take her on his knee and again he would prop her in a chair and play on the piano the tunes that were her favorites.

FILIPINO FREEDOM ASKED IN RESOLVE
Manila, Oct. 29 (By the Associated Press).—Formation of the republic of the Philippines is suggested by concurrent resolution introduced in the Legislature today with the backing of a majority of the members.

It is known, however, that within the past two weeks Mr. Blandford, who was the here in the Seales case, paid a visit to the office of Attorney-General Allen and gave him considerable information.

Mr. Allen is to take personal charge of the prosecution in these cases.

TWO ARE MISSING.
The Partridge girl and Kaldish have not been arrested. Kaldish, it is said, has fled to Switzerland.

John P. Manning, clerk of the Superior Court, said he had received no directions to issue summonses for witnesses in the various cases. There is considerable speculation as to the identity of those to appear.

As far as is known, the case of Albert Victor Bearse, wealthy artist, swindler of $41,000 following an alleged fall out on a Back Bay apartment, does not figure in the cases mentioned in the indictments.

During the spring and early summer, following an order from the board of Health, all dogs in the section were required to be muzzled for a period of four months. The time expired a short time ago, when the ban was lifted.

THREATENED LIFE OF MRS. DOW'S WOMAN GUEST

Jailed Here as a Modern "Fagin"

USES OWN CHILDREN IN THEFT

Judge Orders Test to See if Prisoner is Mentally Responsible

Declared a modern Fagin by the police, a Boston father who, they charged, taught his young daughters how to be shoplifters and personally directed their work in Boston department stores, faced Judge Loud in Municipal Court today.

Angelo Castelli, hypertrophied of Eyreton street, West End, awaiting in the police, state warehouse from two downtown stores by making the little girls the actual thieves. His modified was surprise, declared by the police as fact.

With the daughters, whose ages were seven and nine, Angelo would enter a selected store. He would point out to the girls what he wanted. They, cautiously, of course, would remove the articles indicated, from the counter and the father would drop them in his bag. With a pat on the cheek and a smile for the daughters the trio would then leave the store.

Here the operation would be repeated. The innocent faces of the children kept clerks and bookkeepers from becoming at all suspicious. Angelo finally ran foul of five of the officers' lunch and breakfast at the Ladsburg street station.

They captured him after a struggle in one of the stores, during which, it is alleged, the father tried to shoot the police.

Judge Dow continued the case until a doctor had had time to examine the father. But had been released from $100 to $1000.

"This is the worst case I have ever seen," said the judge. "Here is a man who sends his own flesh and blood out to steal. I can hardly believe that a man who would do this in his right mind. If the doctor reports this man as normal, he will be dealt with severely."

Vermont and New York women who is suing her husband's parents for $1,000,000, charging alienation of his affections.

SUES HUSBY'S PARENTS FOR $1,000,000

Burlington, Vt., Oct. 29.—The million-dollar suit of Mrs. Doris Van Deusen Stevens Woodhouse of Burlington and New York against her husband's parents, Judge James K. Moulton presiding.

The jury will be made up largely of farmers, for both the regular panel and a special panel of twenty, with a few exceptions, are all farmers living outside of Burlington.

C. Douglas Woodhouse, husband of the plaintiff, is not in town and it is not known when he will be here. He has entered a suit for divorce in Henn. Nev. action on which will be taken in the near future.

The alienation suit is said to have grown out of discoveries made by Mrs. Woodhouse that her husband's parents had been instrumental in having him meet a Mrs. McChad of Washington and that her husband was paying attention to Mrs. McChad.

His parents are known to be very wealthy, the father being president of the Merchants' National Bank of this city and maintaining a Summer home here and a residence in New York.

Interest in the case runs high and it is expected that the courtroom will be filled to capacity when the trial starts tomorrow.

PRIDE FORCES DENIALS

Makes Accountant Pride Admit Mistake in Previous Testimony

Charles Poni demonstrated at his trial today that had he not essayed his adventure in sky-high finance he might have made an excellent lawyer.

In cross-examination of Edwin L. Pride, paid accountant, who had examined his books, he succeeded in making Pride retract many essential points in his previous testimony. Earlier in the day Pride had made the statement that Poni's liabilities amounted to $3,000,000. Poni drew from the witness the admission that this was not so.

ALIBI FOR PRIDE

Pride had testified that in his opinion Poni, at the time he audited his books, was insolvent. Under cross-examination by the state prosecutor, as his own counsel, he admitted that he did not know this to be true.

"Isn't it true that of the $2,000,000 so mentioned as his liabilities, almost $2,000,000 represented interest on notes issued by me?" Poni asked.

"Yes," Pride replied. "Isn't it true that you looked between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 in checks, the destination of which you did not and could not locate?"

"Yes," Pride replied. "Isn't it true that you could not and cannot now give any definite figures of the amount of my liabilities?"

"Yes," Pride replied. "Isn't it true that when you examined my books you looked upon 'liabilities' but did not pay any attention to assets?"

"Yes," Pride replied. "Isn't it true that you knew very little about my business?"

"Very little," Pride admitted, under cross-examination, that he did not know the amount of money stolen by one of the Poni agents who absconded to Italy, and that there were between twenty and thirty spurious notes listed among those which comprised the Poni liabilities.

Prior to the cross-examination, Pride had told of various meetings with Poni and his counsel. He said that, upon an exhaustive search of Poni's books he could find no trace of actual business done.

TRAFFIC OFFICE OF GANG

Head of Black Hand Vamp Squad Wanted in Death of Man Found in Cambridge

The Cambridge police are looking for a woman known among the Italian residents as Regina della Malavita.

She is believed to be the head of the Black Hand vamp squad, which, of late years, has been used in many of the Camorra killings in New England.

Women working under the direction of this "Queen of the Black Hand" are believed to have been used to lure to his death the unidentified man whose body was found in the muddy sea at Elder Mill Pond, at the edge of Belmont Cemetery, Cambridge.

It was thought originally that the man had been killed elsewhere and his body carried to the lonely spot for disposition.

The police stated today that the man had been killed at the spot where his body was found; that he had been lured there by Black Hand women; that the same women who entered this man to his death have done similar service for the Black Hand before, and many times before.

The body is at the Litchfield morgue. Today the face was photographed and fingerprints taken in an effort to reveal the identity of the Black Hand's latest victim.

Death was due to a revolver bullet which had entered below the right ear, had passed entirely through the head and had emerged on the opposite side.

The body was frightfully mutilated. The face was almost unrecognizable, due to a heavy cross which had been cut there. Smaller incisions had been found on the neck and trunk.

Because of these markings, the police are convinced that the murder was committed by the Black Hand. Discovery was made by John M. Dow, No. 14 North street, Cambridge. He was walking along Huron avenue while, in passing the little pond, he noticed a body lying at the edge.

VICTIM AN ITALIAN.

The man was about 45 years old, five feet seven inches tall, and 150 pounds in weight. He was dark complexioned, obviously an Italian, and wore rough dark trousers, a brown sweater, and had neither collar nor hat. About 119 in height and one was in one pocket, was a jackknife, unopened, lay near his body.

A thin trail of blood led from the spot where the body was found to the roadside, some ten or fifteen yards away. The police say today they believe the man was killed somewhere else and was brought by automobile to the lonely pond adjoining the cemetery, where his body was dropped by his slayers.

Above, Mrs. Kate Dow, of whose home it is declared the mystery was discussed. At left, Wakefield, who was found slain. At right, Clarence W. Loud, who was cleared of death charge.

MAGRATH FINDS JAIL DRUNKEN POISON IN BODY AUTOIST YEAR OF MRS. COOK

A post-mortem examination of Mrs. Lillian M. Cook showed indications of arsenic poisoning. Medical Examiner George B. Magrath declared today at the trial of J. Thomas Gettigan, Revere grocer, in the Suffolk Superior Court.

Gettigan is charged with first degree murder of Mrs. Cook, who was his aunt, by administering arsenic to her.

The vital organs in Mrs. Cook's body showed a healthy condition and there was no indication of organic disease. Dr. Magrath stated. There were small globules of fat in the inner substance of the liver, kidney and heart, indicating acute poisoning and not a bacteriological disorder.

Dr. Magrath would not say, however, that Mrs. Cook had died because of pericarditis anemia, which was the cause of death given in the death certificate filed by Dr. Michael Nigro. Changes in the heart muscles are pronounced in cases of pericarditis anemia, he said in answer to questions by Assistant District Attorney Maurice Caruso.

Changes were not apparent in the examination of Mrs. Cook's organs.

RULES ALIENS HAVE NO RIGHTS IN U. S.

Chicago, Oct. 30 (By International News Service).—In the opinion of this court, an alien resident in the United States has absolutely no constitutional rights, Federal Judge George T. Page declared today in refusing writs of habeas corpus of five members of the I. W. W. who, upon completion of a sentence imposed upon them for violation of the espionage act during the war, were arrested by immigration authorities for deportation.

TOLD SHE KNOWS TOO MUCH OF PRESTON MURDER CASE

The record, marital and otherwise, of Mrs. Mary Teresa O'Leary Raab went under searching investigation by Melrose police today.

She is the girl whose story to District Attorney E. P. Saltonstall of Middlesex started new inquiry into the mystery of the murder of Patrolman James A. Preston of Wakefield, of which Clarence W. Loud was acquitted.

Mrs. Raab, according to her mother, has been threatened with death unless she kept silent about an alleged assault made upon her at the home of Mrs. Kate Dow of Melrose Highlands, when Mrs. Raab was charged with "knowing too much about the Preston case."

Mrs. Raab, as Mary Teresa O'Leary, was married four years ago to Peter Spudis. How she came to be known as "Raab" is yet to be explained. Melrose police also say she has been known under the name of "Gordon."

The Melrose police also said today that some time in the World War days a Mary Teresa O'Leary of Melrose was arrested on a disorderly charge by police of Lawrence street station in Boston and that the Boston officials got in touch with Melrose police in regard to the case.

Marriage records at Melrose City Hall show that Mary Teresa O'Leary was married August 15, 1917, to Peter Spudis of Pittsburgh, a seaman on U. S. S. Chester. The ceremony was performed in Melrose by the Rev. Hugh Wallace Smith, Episcopal rector. The bride gave her age as sixteen. Spudis gave his as twenty-one. Both were living on No. 14 Myrtle street, Melrose, the present home of the Daniel O'Leary, parents of the bride.

The bride's parents were born in Ireland, while Spudis set down that his father, Peter Spudis, was a native of Germany, while his mother was born in Austria. Peter Spudis had since filed suit for divorce at East Cambridge.

Mrs. Raab, as she was, or Mrs. Raab, as she is now known, became the mother of a child.

The police would like to establish out this mystery of names attributed to the girl and what proceedings resulted from Spudis's divorce action.

Mrs. Raab is said to have been threatened with death unless she kept silent concerning the alleged assault made upon her at the home of Mrs. Kate Dow in Melrose Highlands.

Quarantine Attorney Saltonstall said today in regard to Mrs. Raab's case: "This woman has been to me all the time and has made a very complete statement, which I am not qualified to judge."

Midwives Grand Jury came on Monday. The prosecutor was asked whether, in view of Mrs. Raab's statement, he planned to present the matter to the Grand Jury. He said he did not care to discuss that.

The Preston case, the one of which Clarence W. Loud, Melrose policeman, was acquitted last January after a trial that held interest broadcast over the eastern part of the country.

WOMAN HOLDS KEY.
A woman now holds the key to the Preston shooting mystery, in the opinion of many officials and Melrose citizens.

At the time of the trial some officials felt a woman may have done the shooting. There had been accumulating gossip some weeks before the entry of Mary O'Leary Raab and her story. A man and woman who figured largely in discussion of the case at the first have been seen much in each other's company of late. They have been making together several times. This has raised comment.

There has been increasing news among housewives of the Dow neighborhood of sightings of a certain residence also that the persons who attended these parties would keep bringing up the Preston case.

Housewives related this gossip to their husbands and the Preston case suddenly became town talk again.

The authorities are now checking up on statements repeated in this neighborhood talk which the women started.

The threats against Mrs. Raab were told today by her mother, Mrs. Nora O'Leary of Myrtle street, Melrose Highlands. She said that once over the telephone and twice on the street threats were made that Mrs. Raab's head would be "screwed off" if she did not "keep her mouth shut."

CALLS ON PHON.
Mrs. O'Leary said she called a telephone man on the telephone to ascertain if a woman had engaged a party at which Mrs. Raab was to appear. The man, Mrs. O'Leary called on the telephone, said: "He thought it was not dangerous, said the mother. Mrs. O'Leary went on to say: "He thought it was not dangerous, said the mother. Mrs. O'Leary went on to say: "He thought it was not dangerous, said the mother."

"He said, 'If you can't keep your mouth shut, you'll get your head screwed off.' You are not talking with me, Raab, but I'll be right there. Then he hung up the telephone."

SLAIN SINGER'S DAUGHTER SAYS POLITICS BALKS HALL ARRESTS

MILLS GIRL URGES PUBLIC TO DEMAND SPEEDY ACTION

New Brunswick, N. J., Oct. 30.—Fearing that the murder of her mother is being investigated with an eye to the political effect it will have on the forthcoming election in this State, Charlotte Mills, sixteen-year-old daughter of Mrs. Eleanor R. Mills, choir singer, who was murdered with Rev. Dr. Edward W. Hall on the night of September 14, today issued a public appeal to citizens of New Jersey to bring pressure upon the Governor and all other public officials working on the case to force immediate arrest of persons who are held to be guilty.

Simultaneously with the issuance of the young woman's appeal it was learned that she had sent a vigorous telegram to Governor Edwards of New Jersey asking for an explanation of the delay in arresting "suspected" persons.

CHARGES POLITICAL PLOT. Miss Mills asserted that, although the State had at first "tongued its investigation," Deputy Attorney General Motz, in charge of the investigation, had since stated that he had sufficient evidence upon which to seek indictments. Yet, she says, nothing has been done.

Charlotte's appeal follows: "More than six weeks ago the murdered body of my mother was found. I do not know nor am I interested in the events that led to this crime, which has aroused the entire country, but I do know that certain public officials, elected by the citizens of New Jersey, were either grossly ignorant of, or indifferent to the duties connected with their office, or else they were actuated by sinister motives in so ruthlessly tampering their work of running down the murderers."

MRS. GIBSON DEFIANT. "I am willing to confront Mrs. Hall face to face. I am willing to challenge her, face to face, to deny my charge that she witnessed the murder of the Rev. Edward W. Hall and Mrs. Eleanor R. Mills on the night of September 14."

"I will defy her, face to face, to deny that she was back at the Phillips farm at 1 o'clock in the morning, sobbing over the bodies."

This sensational defiance was hurled at Mrs. Frances Nell Stevens Hall, widow of the slain rector, by Mrs. Jane Gibson in an interview

MADE MISPLAY AT WHIST, WAS SLASHED

Haverhill, Oct. 30.—Because she made a misplay in whist, her husband pursued her with a razor, slashed her on the face, pulled out her hair and beat her into a condition of unconsciousness.

Mrs. Joseph Lee of Stage street testified to this effect today before Judge Caven. She appeared as complainant against her husband, who was charged with assault with a dangerous weapon.

Lee, who twenty years ago was regarded as the best football player Haverhill High School ever turned out, was sentenced to six months in the House of Correction. He appeared and was held in jail of $200.

Betrothal of Miss Mary Atkinson Is Announced, Says Betty Alden

MISS ALICE MANN AT THE WHEEL OF HER AUTO
Miss Alice Mann, daughter of the Isaac T. Manns, has gone back to Washington with her family for the Winter. The Manns' summer place is at Magalloway, on Collingdale Point.

By BETTY ALDEN. The "jucky man" is Henry Francis Colt of Genesee, N. Y., son of Dr. James W. Colt of that city. He graduated from Harvard last June, and is a member of the Institute of 370, Dr. D. E. E., the A. D. Club as well as several others. No date has been set for the wedding, though I would not be at all surprised if the engagement would be a very short one, for the day of the long betrothal is distinctly past.

I NOTE that Mrs. Amory S. Carhart (Isadora Hiss) was one of those in charge of the Autumn ball held on Saturday night at the Tuxedo Club in Tuxedo Park, N. Y.

This affair is always the occasion for innumerable house parties and dinners among the members of the Tuxedo Park colony, many of whom, by the way, have announced their intention of keeping their houses open through the Winter. In fact, Saturday night dances will be held at the club twice a month.

Mrs. Carhart, who has been much to the fore in the social life of the Park ever since she and her husband, a Harvard '20 man, made their country home there, is the daughter of the Chester W. Hilles of Commonwealth avenue.

Mrs. and Mrs. Hilles are planning to spend the Winter in Santa Barbara, Cal., where they have taken a house with the former's sister, Mrs. Hamilton Perkins.

SOCIETY will be well represented at the annual fair of the Animal Reserve League, which will be held at the Hotel Vendome December 1 and 2. There are a host of notables on the board of directors of the league, all of whom are working for the interests of the coming fair.

HEIFETZ PLAYS YOUTH SHIELDS TO IMMENSE AUDIENCE

An absolute dwarf the centre of the stage of Symphony Hall to accommodate Heifetz and his grand piano was all the space that was left when, finally, at about 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the last of the crowd had been wedged into every nook and corner.

The program as presented was as follows: Concerto in E major, No. 1; concerto in A major, Mozart; Romance in F major, Beethoven; "Chorus of Derivatives," Beethoven; "Waves at Play," Grieg; Capriccio, Numbers 13 and 20, Wieniawski; "Serenade," Spanghetti; and the Polonaise in D major, Wieniawski. A long program to which Mr. Heifetz added only one encore before the last number, but several at the conclusion of the concert.

PREFECT VIOLIN PLAYING. Of the concert, the Maart was more pleasing to the audience in content and also in presentation. "The Chorus of Derivatives" was the real gem of the afternoon from a purely technical standpoint— seldom has there been such perfect violin playing.

The old question of whether Heifetz is getting from season to season in depth of feeling seemed to be answered by his affirmative when he played the Romance by Beethoven. There was considerably more appeal to one's emotions in this one number than was felt elsewhere throughout the program. It seemed to possess a different and more interesting Heifetz.

SPENDING VOLUME. The concluding number, the Polonaise by Wieniawski, showed a length of tone and volume that was stunning. It is a brilliant melody and was played absolutely up to the mark.

There was also to be heard something paying that was so nearly perfect that we can't recall what we have heard anything like it. Samuel Chotakofski is remarkable in that he is an artist equal to his line in the soloist.

The shooting is believed to have taken place near Hyde Park avenue, where the boys were bound for a football game. The boy told a physician to whom he had been taken by his boy companions that he had shot himself, but he later told his mother that the wound had been inflicted when one of his companions discharged the weapon, aiming at the ground. The bullet hit a rock, he said, and bounced up, entering his thigh.

MAN DROWNS AS BOAT UPSETS IN MERRIMAC
Haverhill, Oct. 30.—One man was drowned and another narrowly escaped death when a rowboat in which they were crossing the Merrimack River capsized.

A high wind disturbed the water in such an extent that waves were rolled the boat with water. A sort of spin turned it completely over.

Reduction of Wages a Mistake, Says Mr. Hearst

Mr. Hearst's editorial, with which the majority opinion of the United States Railroad Labor Board takes issue, was published in the Boston American on September 12, under the heading, "Reduction of Wages a Mistake. Theory That Country Can Benefit by Such a Move an Economic Error." This editorial was quoted in full by A. C. Wharton, Labor member of the board, in his dissenting opinion. It follows:

The great injury inflicted upon the business of the country by the coal and railroad complications, and upon the people of the country and upon the nation itself, is due primarily to the fundamental economic error that wages should be reduced and that any benefit can come to a country by reduction of wages.

If the late great war has anything at all to its credit, anything at all that we can look to as a general advantage to humanity, it is the fact that the war and the conditions which it created tended to raise the wage scale.

The effort of all intelligent people, as well as humanitarian people, the effort of all people familiar with social and economic principles and objectives, should have been to maintain this wage scale and the standard of living made possible by a high wage scale, even though the cost of living should be somewhat reduced.

We know perfectly well that the supremacy of American products is not due and never has been due and never will be due to the CHEAPNESS of American labor.

It is due to the skill of American labor, the intelligence and education of American labor, the contentment, energy and enthusiasm of American labor, and, of course, in addition to this superiority of American labor, the superiority of American machinery.

The superior skill, education, contentment, energy, enthusiasm of American labor are due primarily to the superior American standard of living and the opportunities, ambitions and interest which that high standard of living creates.

To strike at that standard of living of the American laborer is to strike at the very base of all his superiority, to kill his superior skill and intelligence, his contentment, enthusiasm and interest at the very root.

It is the extreme of false economy—it is the utmost of bad management, to say nothing of the social and ethical questions involved.

It may be taken as an elemental proposition that no saving from wage reduction compensates for the loss of production from discontented labor—or labor rendered less efficient through a reduction of the standard of living and a consequent limitation of those opportunities for education and individual improvement which make American labor the most efficient in the world.

In addition to the injury which a reduction of wages inflicts upon labor and through labor upon production, there is the general injury upon all business which a reduction in purchasing power of the mass of the community inevitably involves.

It is possible that we business men do not all realize that a great part of the general prosperity of the war period and the immediate postwar period was due to high wages and the general distribution of those wages in purchases—for the workingman generally spends nearly all that he earns. When wages were high the workingman and his family bought freely, the shops prospered, store stocks were exhausted, the factories were overwhelmed with orders, and the fullest market prevailed for raw material furnished by the farm and the mine.

Do you, fellow business man, who owns a store, fail to realize that the hand which reduces wages dips into your till to deprive you of a proportionate part of your patronage and your profits?

Do you, fellow business man, who runs a factory, fail to realize that your orders come from those shops, and are dependent in turn upon the patronage and prosperity of those shops?

Do you, fellow farmers and fellow miners, fail to realize that the demand for your products depends upon the demands from the factories, and that these factories depend upon the orders from the shops, and that the orders from the shops depend upon the prosperity and the patronage of these shops, which are in turn dependent upon the prosperity of the wage earners, the greatest individual element in the whole nation?

The conditions of prosperity are a very economic "house that Jack built," and the foundation of the house is the welfare of the worker, based on good wages and consequent high purchasing power.

Therefore, when the mine owners and railroad owners demanded a reduction of wages without absolute necessity they committed a fundamental economic error. When the Railroad Labor Board authorized that reduction, they sanctioned a blow not only at the welfare of the workers, but at the general welfare of all business and at the prosperity of the country.

Of course, the workers would not tolerate this reduction in wages, wholly unnecessary and unjustifiable at this time; and whether moved by selfish considerations or not, they were performing a patriotic service in not tolerating it.

The plain truth of the matter is that any management of any business which cannot succeed and still pay good wages is not only inefficient, but un-American, because good wages for good work not only is—but is recognized to be—a fundamental American proposition.

Most of our American business men are able to conduct their businesses successfully and pay high wages; and they conduct their business successfully not in spite of the high wages, but on account of the high wages—because success is a combination of efficient management and efficient labor.

The proof that reduction in wages was in no way necessary at this time in the coal mines and on the railroads is shown in the fact that great industries, like the Steel Trust, under the skillful management of Elbert H. Gary, were raising their wages 20 per cent. at the time that these mining and railroad industries were attempting to reduce wages—and is further shown in the fact that the coal operators have finally put their men back to work at the old wage, and can, and will, not only conduct their businesses successfully with wages at that standard, but prosper very handsomely in addition.

The railroads must not only eventually pay the previously established wage, which they attempted to reduce, but will probably soon have to pay an added wage.

The demand for labor is increasing throughout the nation. Wages will increase in proportion and the opportunity to take advantage of the necessities of the workingman will not exist, even for those who short-sightedly desire to take such advantage.

The fundamental mistake, therefore, which has precipitated all the injury of these strikes and these interruptions of the business of the country, and these burdens upon business and upon individual citizens, which will endure as long as the limitations on fuel and transportation endure, was made by the coal operators and the railroad managers when they unjustly demanded lower wages, and by the Railroad Labor Board which sanctioned these unjustifiable demands.

Perhaps these mistakes may not be made so often when it is thoroughly realized how important high wages and a high standard of living and a high purchasing power are not only to the general prosperity of the nation, but to the prosperity of every individual business—to its business and to its business and to every business and profession and occupation throughout the whole country.

A quantity of oil and waste in a dust and an open door to an unoccupied apartment caused police to investigate.

Turning in a fire alarm, he went back to the Chase apartment to see if any of the family had returned from a trip, but found no one. Then, however, searching for the cause of the blaze, discovered oil and waste in a closet.

RAILROAD BOARD ATTACKS "LIVING WAGE"

Wharton who upheld the basic soundness and justice of the "living wage" in industry, and charged that "the plain truth of the matter is that any management of any business which cannot succeed and still pay good wages is not only inefficient, but un-American, because good wages for good work not only is—but is recognized to be—a fundamental American proposition."

Mr. Wharton denounced in his opinion an article published recently by William Randolph Hearst, which assailed the "fundamental economic error" of the board's action, and that any benefit can come to a country by a reduction of wages.

"The superior skill, education, contentment, energy and enthusiasm of American labor are due primarily to the superior American standard of living and the opportunities, ambitions and interest which that high standard of living creates," wrote Mr. Hearst.

"To strike at that standard of living of the American laborer is to strike at the very base of all his superiority, to kill his superior skill and intelligence, his contentment, enthusiasm and interest at the very root."

"It is the extreme of false economy—it is the utmost of bad management—to say nothing of the social and ethical questions involved."

W. L. McMillen, another labor member of the board, explained that he felt obliged to vote for the increase because the delay was costing the workers involved approximately $70,000 a day.

The "supporting opinion" filed by the groups representing capital and the public extolled the theory of a "living wage" and said "the theory of the dissenting opinion, if carried to its legitimate conclusion, would wreck every railroad in the United States, and if extended to other industries, would carry them into commensurate ruin."

"In the judgment of a majority of the labor board," it read, "and we believe of a great majority of the people, the shipment of a strike was an agreement without any real justification, and this is said with the kindest feeling for the employees who have suffered most from its effects. It has brought harm to all and good to none."

The statement, placing the loss of wages to the men at $77,555,524, said the shipment of a strike was the course taken by the maintenance men in averting disaster of the strike on the principle of the

"My daughter has twice been threatened since that party while walking on the street," she has been approached by two different persons who told her that her head would be blown off if she did not keep her mouth shut.

The new investigation is being made with utmost secrecy. But it is said that a woman is being sought by the Melrose police. This woman is said to have declared that she knew who slew Preston.

Fairbanks Preston was shot and killed in a lonely spot on the Lowell road in Melrose, near Lake Quam, on the night of April 1, 1921.

The policeman had been shot four times. His notebook was an incriminating document against the names of Clarence W. Lord and "Alvin" Bennett, Highland street, Somerville.

The news of the present investigation was learned from conversations with Mr. O'Leary, Mrs. Raab's attorney. He declined to discuss the case, but said that he had a story to tell, which would result in the new inquiry.

His daughter has retained Attorney Robert Hardy of Boston, and her counsel and the district attorney have united in warning her not to talk. Mrs. Raab refused herself to interview.

Her decision not to talk has convinced Melrose police, who have been refused admission to the Raab home.

On the 29th, before she was told to be silent, Mrs. Raab is said to have told the story of her visit to District Attorney Sullivan. In it was featured a party at the home of Carl P. Dow in Melrose Highlands, at which several persons prominent in the Lowell trial were present, it is said.

MURDER MENTIONED.

She is said to have told the district attorney that a woman at the house said to her: "I know who shot Preston. Preston." This woman is now being sought by the police. Her description after correspondence with that of a woman who was seen prominently during the Lowell trial, but who was never interrogated. Later she said, she roughly handled by several at the party and then a woman dragged her by throwing a towel over her head which contained something that smelt like an anesthetic, she declared.

"While lying on the floor in a semi-conscious state, she heard a woman say to a man present: 'I think she's faking and knows everything we're saying. Let's find out.' Then she was dressed with water and the towel was removed from her face. The entire attack was said to have been occasioned by one woman member of the party who, it is alleged, remarked: 'That girl knows too much. She will probably go and tell all she knows.'"

CLAIMS OFFER OF $4,000.

The alleged incident occurred one week ago Sunday and Mrs. Raab arrived at her mother's home with her hair disheveled, her body drenched with water and her clothing torn.

On the following night, she charges, a man offered her $4,000,

GIRL HOPES "KLAN" WILL VISIT GARLAND

GIRL HOPES "KLAN" WILL VISIT GARLAND

The Flapper's article, based on observations during a three day stay at Charles A. Garland's "April Farm," in North Carver, near the farm of his intimate friend, the girl Doris, Anna and Harry. She had an extended talk with Garland, and when she asked him what he was looking for on the farm, he asked her if she had ever heard of Jesus Christ. When she sought an explanation of this cryptic remark, he told her that "if you were really interested you'd understand" without being told. Now go on with the story.

By the FLAPPER

CARYL FRANK.

There is one thing to be gained from conversation with Charles Garland. After a few questions on his part, and a few halting answers on yours, you begin to feel that everybody is out of step but him. Which is an opinion quite the reverse of the one you brought to April Farm.

"At least," he makes you think, "this man has thought out the problems of life. Whether he is solving them entirely or not is an open question at least he is thinking." From the religious aspect of his isolation he went finally to the point of view.

He started with another question. "Unless you consent to be interviewed you will never get anywhere with Charles Garland."

"Do you," he said, "believe that the laborer should earn for the rest of us? Do you think it is right for the capitalist to sit back and let his money earn for him?"

You mumble a newly-born idea on the subject and Garland takes up your burden.

"Take K. P., the girl poet who is singing her songs at the expense of others, wouldn't that be depriving the others of singing their songs?" "But not everybody was meant to sing songs," I suggested. "Not everybody can."

"We don't believe that," said Harry. "We believe with K. P. that everybody has in him to sing some kind of a song. In most of us it is crushed very early in life."

While Miss Eveta Nudsen, leading lady at the St. James Theatre, Back Bay, was playing at the theatre, thieves entered her suite at No. 30 Homewood street, Back Bay, with a skeleton key, broke into two of her trunks and stole clothing and jewelry valued at $1,000.

When Miss Nudsen arrived home from the theatre she found her trunks ransacked and clothing and jewelry stolen.

The thieves ransacked several bureau drawers, but did not take their contents. She reported the robbery to the police of Station 14.

GUARDS RESCUE 4 IN DORY OFF SWAMPSCOTT

Swampscott, Oct. 30.—Cringing from cold in an open dory in the vicinity of Egg Rock, three miles from shore, four men were rescued today by a crew from Nahant station of the United States Coast Guard. Those rescued were Daniel P. Pritchard, No. 39 Howard street, Revere; W. G. Rodd, No. 13 Irving street, Malden; J. Henry Blake, No. 234 Main street, Everett; and James P. Duggan of Revere. Pritchard is sixty years old.

Yesterday the four went out fishing from frequent and when they did not return relatives notified the Coast Guard. Captain Frank Gove of the Coast Guard was asked to help, and with Guards and gasoline motor launch, they set out for Egg Rock, where he recalled seeing four men fishing in the afternoon.

Captain Gove said the men would have been powerless to reach shore on account of the gale. They were exhausted from cold and exposure, but were able to go home.

GETS THREE MONTHS FOR NON-SUPPORT

"I can't give you any money. I must keep all I earn to get wife away." Mrs. Agnes McCoy of Sumner place testified in Court today when she asked for money and he was sentenced to three months in the House of Correction for failure to support his wife and six children.

Naval Officer's Wife Ends Life in Back Bay With Ether and Razor Blade

Despondent because her husband had applied for a divorce because of her temporary infatuation for another young man, Mrs. Marjorie Logan, twenty-six years old, wife of Lieutenant-Commander Edgar A. Logan of the U. S. S. Brazen, committed suicide in her apartment at No. 55 Queensbury street, Back Bay.

William Logan, another lodger at that house, entered her room after noting a strong smell of ether about the hall, and found her lying fully clothed on the bed. She had slashed her left wrist with a razor blade, while she held in her other hand a can of ether, from which she had drunk a liberal draught.

DIES IN HOSPITAL

Lately afflicted with a lung ailment, Mrs. Logan died in the city hospital and died there without recovering consciousness.

Back of the suicide lies a young wife's grief for a bit of thoughtless folly that wrecked her home and disgraced her husband, according to word from Portsmouth, N. H. She and Logan made their home there for a time, while the husband was stationed at the Portsmouth naval yard.

CAUSED GOSSIP

According to these reports, Mrs. Logan became infatuated with a young captain at the navy yard. For a time this went unnoticed. Finally, however, it came out, and so great was the gossip that this captain's wife was forced to leave him, while authorities at the yard ordered him transferred to a distant post.

From that time on the Logan's married life was stormy. Logan was transferred to the Atlantic fleet and later to the U. S. S. Brazen, which is now on duty near Gibraltar. He recently filed divorce papers against Mrs. Logan.

WORLD WAR ROMANCE

The marriage was the outgrowth of a World War romance. Lieutenant Commander Logan was assigned to a destroyer during the war and was on duty with a squadron which had its base at Queenstown, Ireland. Mrs. Logan was then Miss Marjorie Payne, and came to him as a nurse.

Mrs. Logan took her Queensbury street apartment at No. 55, and she obtained a position as clerk of stenographer with the Quincy Cold Storage Warehouse Company, in the North End, and her husband's sources were approximately $150 a month of her debt.

Lieutenant Commander Logan, a graduate of Annapolis in the class of 1909, was a graduate of West Point, N. Y., where his mother conducted the Reservation Hotel. The North End, and his wife's suicide today by radio. The Brazen is scheduled to return before winter.

Miss Castle Joins Miss Duncan in Fight for "Freedom of the Knees"

Irene Castle has joined the battle for the freedom of the knees. Today at Rochester, N. Y., the dancer quit in her performance of "Dance Fashions of 1922," and, accompanied by her husband, returned to her home in Lihala.

She gave as her reason the long jumps between performances and the unsuitability of her looking, but her experience in Providence may have had something to do with her decision, as expressed to her manager.

HURT IN AUTO CRASH

Miss Castle was slightly injured in a crash today, when an auto in which she was riding collided with a steamroller. She was able to return to her hotel after receiving medical aid.

In Boston Miss Duncan got the municipal rap for going more or less to a better. She was more outspoken than Irene, with the result that she was barred from ever appearing in Boston again. In Chicago she declared that she was through with America, and would return to Russia, where one could have vodka and freedom.

WILSON GETS HIS AUTO CARD BACK

Harold D. Wilson, former prohibition enforcement chief, who operated a license system in the city, today was notified that his license was being returned to him.

According to State Register of Motor Vehicles Frank A. Goodwin, Wilson is the first operator out of 10,000 on the road in this State "whose wheels were so loose as to break away and kill a man."

An interview published quoted Wilson as saying that the taking away of the license was a punishment to keep him from the streets. "I regret that I am not a better driver," he said.

ESTHER WATSON TIPPLE

WOMAN RES. QUILTS SOCIETY "POISON!"

Mrs. Josie E. Painter, forty-five years old, died in her room in a South End lodging house, the victim of a therapeutic poisoning, according to a statement which she herself made shortly before her death.

Death came after her husband, Mrs. Painter's father, who had been the influence of liquor, left the house. His disappearance was followed closely by the appearance of a strange woman who talked with Mrs. Painter for some time.

POLICE HUNT FAIR

This woman, the exact hour of whose departure is unknown, gave Mrs. Painter a bottle of poison, according to the latter's dying statement to the landlady. Both the woman and Mr. Painter are being sought by the police.

Mrs. Painter moved into the house which is located at No. 22 East Brookline street, with her husband last Thursday. The two told the police that Mrs. Mabel Maloff, that they had come from Maine. Her other details of her past history could be unearthed.

The couple rented a room in the attic. All that is known of their movements is that Painter left the place Saturday afternoon, after apparently having imbibed too much liquor. Mrs. Painter remained in her room, and nothing more was heard from her more than 24 hours.

HEARD SCREAMS

"Then screams were heard coming from the attic. Other lodgers noted the screams and called the police. Mrs. Painter in agony. Mrs. Painter, who came unknown so shortly afterward, was unable to explain her statements. She died before medical aid could reach her.

Mrs. Whitte said that she saw the strange woman as Mrs. Painter's room shortly after the departure of the woman left.

MARRIAGE TANGLE IS BARRED IN COURT

Accused Wife, Fighting Divorce, Declares First Matrimonial Venture Was Illegal

William M. Redfern of Somerville celebrated his twenty-seventh wedding anniversary today in somewhat different manner. He sought annulment of his marriage before Judge Fox in Middlesex divorce session at East Cambridge.

He says that his wife, Ida Hatfield Redfern, was already married to Joseph O'Rell when he married her twenty-seven years ago and that the Redfern-Hatfield ceremony was illegal thereby.

But Mrs. Redfern, opposing the plea for nullity, says that she had found and Redfern knew it—that O'Rell already had a wife living. Her marriage to O'Rell was her marriage and her marriage to Redfern was and still is binding.

KIDNAP THE TANGLE.

Mrs. Redfern declared that thirty years ago, as Ida Hatfield, she wed O'Rell, lived with him about two years, then learned that he had gone under names of "Alec" and "Morrell." He had been previously wed at Concord, N. H., to Delina Southern and that the latter was still his wife at that time.

Mrs. Redfern said she wrote to a newspaper attorney, who advised her that she was not O'Rell's wife, whereupon she married Redfern, who was a lodger where she was then living in Norway street, Back Bay.

She declared today that Redfern not only knew of the O'Rell tangle at that time but had offered to help her obtain a divorce until they found one was not necessary.

COUNTER CHARGES

Redfern declared today that he was anything of O'Rell when he wed Ida Hatfield "O'Rell." He said the first he knew about that plan of her life was when he came upon an "O'Rell-Hatfield" marriage certificate and a photograph of O'Rell in January, 1921.

Delina Southern O'Rell, according to Mrs. Redfern, divorced O'Rell, but not until 1906, then married a man named Pickles, with whom she now lives in Connecticut. Counsel for Mrs. Redfern introduced a deposition of Mrs. Pickles that she married Joseph O'Rell. With the deposition was a photograph purporting to be a picture of a Redfern and of Mrs. Redfern to be identical with the picture Redfern says he came upon in January, 1921, with the "O'Rell-Hatfield" marriage certificate.

Thus the claim of Redfern that his marriage will not hold because of his wife's previous marriage is countered by Mrs. Redfern's claim that her first marriage will not hold because of a former marriage of O'Rell-Hatfield.

HOLD GIRL WHO SAYS SHE WAS ROBBED

Helped up by a stranger and robbed of her pocketbook containing $23, was the story told to Judge Hayden Boston Court today by Miss Violet Holden of New London, Ct.

Mrs. Holden, who appeared on a charge of drunkenness, declared she was taking a walk on Commonwealth avenue, when a young man approached her, grabbed her handbag and vanished. She said she then became hysterical and police officers who heard her screams arrested her. She said she lived in a Beacon Hill house at the end of the month, a week.

Medbury Says Most Men Want to Taxi Up the Road to Success

HUNDREDS of men all over the country are preaching to us that we should stick to the "straight and narrow path." It's hard for a man to keep on the right road these days when there are so many detours.

IT'S all right to climb to the top of the ladder of success, but somebody has got to stay down at the bottom to hold the ladder.

THINK more room at the bottom than there is at the top and a lot of people would rather stay below where it's not so crowded.

OPPORTUNITY knocks once at every man's door, but the trouble is it comes around early in the morning before most of us are up.

MANY people mistake the knock of opportunity for that of a bill collector.

SOME men try to go up the road to success in a taxicab.

NEVER try to do this because even if you reach the top, it will cost you all you made to pay for the taxi. A lot of us have been on the road to fame, but we stopped in at too many of the road houses.

SUCCESSFUL men say that all of us can profit by our mistakes. May be so, but how about the guy who accidentally steps off the Singer Building?

THE undertaker is the only one who profits by his mistakes.

I trouble is most of us don't look far enough ahead. Crooks can look straight ahead and round corners. They make great business executives because they can see two men in the eye at the same time.

GREAT men say, "Make up your mind what you're going to do and then do it," but what they mean is "Make up your mind when you're going to do and then do it."

THE preacher tells us that a honest man is hard to find, but the police department tells us it is a whole lot harder to find the crooked ones.

EVERY MAN, no matter who he is, has a guardian angel to help him in his task and some guys are so lazy they have to get the guardian angel to do all the work.

BUT the preacher tells us that all a guardian angel is supposed to do is to stick around and see that you do the work. One guy wanted to know how he could get to be a guardian angel.

ANYBODY can get what he goes after.

THE only goal that's hard to reach in the early part of your life is an age.

THE secret of success is work, but most of us are willing to let it remain a secret.

TAXI, WHAT COLOR?

By Arthur Neale

IT would appear that many a Greenwich Village futurist artist is slapping out a good living these days by painting the New York taxicabs.

And, as the out-of-town visitor stands at the Broadway curb watching these multicolored chariots flash by, well may he be pardoned for thinking he's witnessing some kind of parade.

For truly it looks more like a circus turnout than a series of motor cars.

But such a dazzling array must be a little hard on the taxicab owner.

No wonder those towers were erected on Fifth avenue!

If the sight of the Police Department is valued, they should be established all over the city. So if you see two taxi men fighting nowadays, no question of any game of chance is involved. It's more likely to be a case of artistic temperament and professional jealousy. One man will have said his cab is a far better painting than the others.

NEWLYWED WAITS

If, as the poet said, many a rose lives to blush unseen, it's because the writer of bedroom farces aren't doing their bit.

The ideal place to spend a honeymoon says a traveler, is Hawaii. (Even in this land of the ukulele you can stir each other along.)

The fellow who declared some girls are flirts to the flatterers must have had reference to manicurists.

A vaudeville circuit has barred all mother-in-law wise cracks, but that doesn't do the mother-in-law any good. They still hear 'em.

A great many women who stand up for their rights stand up in the subway and surface cars.

A majority of lovers who believe that two hearts beat as one also figure they feed as one. But the grocer, butcher and tailor know different.

There is nothing certain about the statement that matches are made in heaven. We do know, however, where a great many of them end.

IN WHEWTOPIA

By Les Conklin

WHEN Dink Butts lived in Whewtopia, he knew more guys than anybody except the man who took the census. His list of addresses was as big as a telephone book.

He believed that there was safety in numbers.

Dink never paid for his meals, because he always was invited out for dinner.

He worked in the afternoon, but he always managed to drop in just in time for tea.

When the girls saw Dink coming they used to look up the parlor.

So many women used to call Dink on the telephone that the landlady made him sleep in the phone booth.

None of the other boarders could ever use the phone, because Dink always was on the wire.

Playing on Names

The name was Schafertel. Just before the war he had changed it to Fitzgerald. A short time ago a very old acquaintance was introduced to him afresh. "This fellow has the name MacTellan." "Why have you changed your name again?" asked the acquaintance. "Well," replied MacTellan, "I told people, when I told them that my name is MacTellan, have asked, 'But what was your name before that?' Now I can tell them 'Fitzgerald.'"

 "WHAT on earth cannot you keep to business, it is quite unfair. If I were really your secretary and nothing more you would never persecute me for answers like this."
 "Yes I would. I have a perfect right to know why anyone in my service is unhappy. Your fencing tells me that it is something which I have done which has hurt you, and I insist upon knowing what it is."
 "I shall not tell you," defiantly.
 "I am very angry with you, Althea," my voice was stern.
 "I don't care. Here was passionate."
 "I think you are very rude."
 "You have told me that before—well I am rude then! I will tell you nothing. I will do nothing but just be your servant to obey orders which relate to the work I have been engaged for."
 I felt so furious I had to lie back in my chair and shut my eyes.
 "You have a very poor sense of a bargain, if you only knew it!"

the letter. Your underneath constant hostility makes everything so difficult, the influence of your whole attitude toward me, and of everything you say and do, is that you feel injured, that you have some grudge against me."
 "What on earth have I ever done to you except treat you with over courtesy? Except that one day when you had the baby in your arms and I was rude, but apologized and that one other time when I kissed you, and God knows I was very enough afterwards and have regretted it ever since. What is the reason of your attitude, it is absolutely unfair!"
 This seemed to upset her completely. She stated the idea that she was thought unfair. It may have made her realize too that she had a definite sense of injury. She lost her temper; she stamped her scarp of a foot.
 "I hate you!" she burst out.
 "You and your hateful! I wish I was dead!" and then she sank into the sofa and covered her face with her hands, and by the shaking of her shoulders, I saw that she was crying.
 If I had been good enough to think that I, suppose I had been, "reason of all this was probably most flattering to me, and an extra proof of her state of mind, but the agitation it had caused me into made me unable to balance things, and I too allowed my temper to get the better of me and I got up as best I could and wearing my crush, I walked towards her.
 "I shall expect an apology," was all I said, and went in and let her alone.
 If we are to go on fighting like this, life won't be worth living! I tried to calm myself and went in the window, but the servants came into the room to make the bed, so I was forced to go back again to the sitting-room. Althea had gone into the little salon. I suppose for the same reason, she could not have returned to her room. I sat down in my chair quite exhausted. I did not feel like reading or doing anything.
 It was today that we were to go to the Duchesse's in the afternoon for Althea to be presented to her friends as my wife! I wondered if she had forgotten this.
 After an hour Burton came in with the second post.
 "You do look badly, Sir Nicholas," he said. His face was perplexed and troubled. "Can I get you anything?"
 "Where is Her Ladyship, Burton?"
 "Then he told me she had gone out. I could see he wanted to say something. His remarks are generally valuable."
 "You with it, Burton."
 "I do think it is Mam'selle that's causing all the trouble. As bad luck would have it, as I opened the door to let Her Ladyship out, who should come up the stairs a moment after but Mam'selle. They must have passed on the floor below. Neither had taken the lift, which as you know, Sir Nicholas, is out of order again, since last night."
 "Then she thinks Burton has come in here to see me, Burton. Her jewel what a devilish complication! I think we had better move from the flat as quickly as we can."
 "It seems as if it would be advisable, Sir Nicholas."
 "Can you suggest anything, Burton? I really am quite knocked over today."

 "Her Ladyship don't chat to servants like some ladies, or I could easily let her maid know that Mam'selle don't visit here, so that won't do," he mused. "You could not tell her yourself straight out, Sir Nicholas, could you?"
 "It would be difficult, because it presupposes I think she minds about it, and for me to let her know that would insult her more than anything."
 "Her garden, Sir Nicholas, but there was a young woman some twenty years ago who had a temper like that, and I always found it was best just to make a fuss of her and not do so reason at. That is what they want, Sir Nicholas, indeed it is. I've watched them in all classes for a matter of many years. You can get what you want from them if you only make a fuss of them."
 "What does 'make a fuss of' mean?"
 "Well it is not for me to tell you, Sir, knowing ladies as you do, but it is just kissing and fondling them and then things, making them feel that they're just everything—even reasonable, Sir Nicholas."
 Burton's dry humorous face delighted me. His advice was the first class. "I told him, and he left me alone."
 That would be one way of winning or losing everything certainly! But it would also be unbecomingly my word, and I don't believe I could do that.
 Althea came in in time for luncheon. Her face was set in a mournful, obstinate mood. We went into the dining-room immediately, and so there was no chance of conversation. I noticed that she wore no bracelets or rings, nothing of mine, not even the wedding ring.
 We were to go to each other during the meal, and made conversation, and when we were alone with the coffee I said:
 "I hope that you have not forgotten that at 4 o'clock we are to go to the Duchesse's to meet the friends that she thinks it is suitable for you to know."
 Althea, starting up, could see she had not registered the fact for this date.
 "I would rather not go," she said resentfully.
 "I dare say you would. So would I, but we owe the Duchesse gratitude for all her kindness to us, and I fear we must."
 We did not speak further. I could not talk until she apologized, and I rose to go out of the room. She gave me my crush. Her not apologizing made me burn with resentment.
 I had not been in the salon a minute, however, before she came in her face crimson. She stood in front of me.
 "I apologize for showing my temper this morning. Would it not do after today if I just lived up to someone, and came in to work as before? It is a perfect force that I live here, and at a wedding, even the servants must be laughing at me!"
 I notice you do not wear a wedding ring. Your whole attitude is perfectly impossible, and I demand an explanation. What is the reason of it? We made a bargain, and you are not keeping it."
 "If you will give me time to work I will pay you back the fifty thousand francs and the clothes and jewels I can leave behind me—I want to go."
 She spoke with a break in her voice now.
 "Why do you want to go and suddenly there is nothing different today to yesterday or any other day? I refuse to be the puppet of your caprice."
 The blood clashing and unclashing her hands, never looking at me.
 "Althea," I said sternly. "Look at me, there is no one—I just

 "This 'was of a chic,' as Maurice afterwards told me. I had telephoned and broken the news to him while I was waiting for Althea to come. He was not surprised, he pretended, and now that the marriage is an accomplished fact, he is too well bred not to fall into the attitude of delight about it. Maurice has no intention of dropping me—married or single!"

me straight in the face and tell me the truth. What is your reason?"
 "I can't," still her eyes were down.
 "Is there someone else?" My voice sounded fierce to my own ears. I had a sudden fear.
 "But you said it would not matter if there was someone else—if I told you," she answered defiantly.
 "There is someone else, then?" I tried to be casual.
 "Look at me," slowly she raised her eyes until they met my own.
 "No, there is no one—I just don't want to live here in this flat any longer."

 "Unless you can give me some definite reason for this extraordinary behavior on your part I am afraid I must refuse to discuss the situation, and meanwhile will you please go to your room and fetch the ring and bracelet?"
 She turned and left without a word—I daren't she wondered what I was going to do with them. Later:
 "Things are developing! My bride and I never spoke a word on the way to the Hotel de Courville. She was looking the most desirable morsel a man could wish to present to his friends. The table cloth
